NAIROBI, April 17 (AFP) - The Burundi government on Sunday promised not to interfere in neighbouring Rwanda's affairs following the resumption of hostilities between the government and rebels there.

"Concerning Rwanda, the Burundi government says that the Rwandan question should have a peaceful solution. Burundi will not interfere in the country's political problems," according to a statement from the prime minister's office read on national radio and monitored by the BBC.

"The Burundi government affirms that no attack against Rwanda will emanate from Burundi," the statement said.
